Illinois Treasurer Frerichs Encourages Families to Save for Higher Education Costs

Illinois State Treasurer Michael Frerichs recognized 529 Day on May 29, by encouraging families to save for future education through Illinois' highly rated Bright Start 529 or Bright Directions 529 college savings plans. Illinois taxpayers contributions, or minimum balance requirements to open or maintain one. The new Bright Directions 529 phone app can be downloaded from the App Store and from Google Play. The new app is the latest in a string of enhancements that Treasurer Frerichs and Union Bank & Trust have implemented to make Bright Directions 529 a more modern and low-cost 529 plan. Cook County Treasurer Maria Pappas' Historic Property Tax Sale Reform Legislation Passes in Illinois /General Assembly

Sweeping property tax foreclosure reforms pushed by Cook County Treasurer Maria Pappas passed Saturday in the Illinois General Assembly and now head to the governor's desk. Once signed by Governor JB Pritzker, the reform package will be the most significant Illinois homeowner protection measure enacted in decades. House Bill 4537 will bring Illinois into compliance with the 2023 U.S. Supreme Court ruling in Tyler v. Hennepin. The court found that when governments foreclose on a property for unpaid taxes, any equity above the debt owed must be returned to the property owner. Each year, under current Illinois law, overdue taxes on homes, commercial properties, and vacant lots are sold to tax buyers. In return, the buyers receive a lien entitling them to take deed to the property – and any equity the owner has in it – if the owner doesn't pay what's owed within one to three years. With this legislation, the old system will be replaced by one that returns to the former property owner any equity above what was owed. It was crafted with input from Cook County President Toni Preckwinkle, downstate county treasurers and housing advocates, and in collaboration with state Sen. Celina Villanueva (D-Chicago) and state Rep. Curtis Tarver (D-Chicago). The core reform in HB 4537 is the creation of a tax deed auction system already used successfully in many other states. Taxes, interest, and fees owed will be paid by the highest bidder. Remaining surplus equity will be returned to the former property owner by the county treasurer. The legislation requires Cook County to hold six more tax sales involving private tax buyers. After the sixth sale, expected to occur in 2030, tax buying will no longer be allowed in Cook County. Instead, the county will hold all the liens for overdue property taxes, and if the property owner doesn't pay what's owed within one to three years, the county can auction off the property's deed to the highest bidder.

CDPH Expands Mental Health Safety Net

By: Ashmar Mandou

As we honor Mental Health Awareness Month, the Chicago Department of Public Health (CDPH) revealed the next phase of its Mental Health Equity Initiative (MHEI), the Healthy Chicago Mental Health Collective (HC-MHC). HC-MHC is designed to enhance collaboration among mental health providers, bring increased resources to underserved communities, and close the city's life expectancy gap. HC-MHC will work with community partners, such as Gads Hill Center, La Rabida Children's Hospital, and Alivio Medical Center Inc., to tailor treatment to the most vulnerable populations, such as high-risk children and youth, human trafficking survivors, people living with HIV/AIDs, people with serious mental illness and substance use, and people with complex medical and social needs. Director of Behavioral Health Program Operations at CDPH Katherine Calderon expounded on the significance of the new phase and how the new initiative will improve access to mental health services.

Lawndale News: Can you share the significance of Chicago Department of Public Health's new phase of the Mental Health Equity Initiative? Katherine Calderon: We are excited to launch this rendition of the Healthy Chicago Mental Health Collective. We have been working as a mental health department, building out our mental health initiatives for the past five years. Also, we have been serving the community through our clinics for longer than that and this project marks an expansion and evolution of our mental health initiatives overtime. I think some key aspects include funding more partners, who are doing innovative work in addressing gaps and services where we see the greatest need. Both geographically but also among populations that I think historically don't get the mental health services they need...and then we are also integrating all this work with our own direct services, such as our city run clinics.

LN: How does this new initiative improve access to mental health care for Chicagoans?

KC: For this project we have developed a tiered system within the city. We could look at the intersection of lack of health insurance and high unmet mental health needs, and triage getting more resources to those areas. So, the hope would be that not only are we uplifting and leveraging the existing services in the community but also making sure that we can expand those services in those areas. The hope would be that Chicagoans across the city can get access to services easier at different touchpoints through their doctor, their community, at the clinic setting depending on their preference, but that those services are available in communities where we see more need.

LN: Part of the key elements includes integrated care coordination. How does that look when put into practice?

KC: Integrated care is considered a holistic approach to an individual. It would be looking into all their needs versus treating a certain aspect of what they might need. If someone might present with a mental health issue as well as a health issue and may have some issues with social drivers of health, then integrated care would allow for multiple staff and personnel within an agency to be able to respond to those needs in a way that is seamless for the individual. In our clinic setting at CDPH, we provide psychiatric services, therapy services, case management, and nursing. So integrated care within our settings would be, for example, a client can come in through the door for a variety of needs and then be able to have our staff respond to all of that based on assessment and the resources that we have available.

LN: How can residents access services through the HC-MHC network?

KC: We have a map on our website that provides all the sites for the locations of our partners. We are building a partnership with NAMI Chicago, and they will be leveraging their hotline to help their call takers sort of connect people to the different partners. To learn more about the new initiative and HC-MHC services, residents can visit www.chicago.gov. A total of $16.2 million is being invested through a combination of corporate funds, Opioid Settlement Funds, and Ryan White Part A funds to support this work.

Regresa PlayStreets para el verano en Chicago

Con la llegada de los meses más cálidos, el Departamento de Salud Pública de Chicago (CDPH) retoma la iniciativa PlayStreets, basándose en el programa piloto del año pasado que demostró cómo las actividades organizadas por la comunidad pueden crear espacios seguros y activos para familias y niños en toda la ciudad. El año pasado, más de 23,000 residentes participaron en 53 eventos vecinales, transformando las calles locales en espacios para el juego, el movimiento y la convivencia. Este verano, el CDPH colabora con Phalanx Family Services (Región Sur) y Building Brighter Futures Center for the Arts

(Región Oeste) para ampliar el programa a más de 200 eventos en las Áreas Comunitarias Prioritarias, con un enfoque especial en aquellas comunidades que históricamente han contado con menos oportunidades para el juego seguro al aire libre y para actividades que promueven la salud. Para obtener más información sobre PlayStreets y las ubicaciones, visite www.chicago.gov. Crédito de la foto: Departamento de Salud Pública de Chicago
